

Highlights of the Week

It has felt like a very busy week! Since I last wrote, the School Ambassadors and House Captains have all been elected. We have been so impressed with how many children applied for these roles of responsibility. It has been a truly fabulous reflection of how confident and capable they have become. The letters and speeches have all been wonderful - particularly because they have come from the children themselves and have demonstrated how they feel they have grown and how much they have to offer back to the Ongar Family. Whether elected to one of these 12 roles or not, they should all be feeling very proud of themselves - through these elections and also through everyday routines, lessons and activities, they have all made a wonderful start to Year 6 and are clearly ready to be role models.

In many of our lessons this week, we have completed our first round of practice SATs tests and again, they have sat these with positivity and resilience. We are aware that we have taken these tests when we still have the majority of Year 6 teaching still to come but in terms of learning exam techniques, I hope the children have found them useful.

In many of the afternoons this week, we have focused on our Art unit, using cameras and editing techniques. Having originally planned to focus on photomontages, macro photography and editing, it was interesting to see that in this modern day, many of the children struggled to actually take a photo in focus. We will continue to practice this, but we have still managed to end the week with some amazingly adapted portraits which will be going on display in the Hall in the near future.
